

OVERVIEW of the Daf

1) Krias Shema in the Mikdash

The gemara tells us that different Amoraim wanted to include the Aseres HaDibros as part of krias sh'ma outside of the Beis HaMikdash and the reason they decided against it.

The additional brocha made for the mishmar that is leaving is also delineated.

2) The primary component of a brocha

The issue as to whether the beginning or the end of a brocha is its primary component is brought up.

The gemara is unsuccessful at resolving the issue.

3) Emes V'yatziv

If a person does not say emes v'yatziv or emes v'emunah they do not fulfill their obligation.

4) Four statements from רבה בר חיננא סבא משמיה דרב:

- When a person bows in shemoneh esrei they should bow at the word boruch and straighten at God's name.
- Between Rosh HaShanah and Yom Kippur we

Distinctive INSIGHT

Daily Reading of the עשרת הדברות In Public

וקורין עשרת הדברות

Many poskim (שו"ת הרשב"א, Rema O.C. 1:5) rule according to this Gemara, that the reading of the עשרת הדברות in public has been discontinued due to the concern that heretics would claim that only these mitzvos are the ones that are important.

In his Igros Moshe, R' Moshe Feinstein, zt"l, writes that in a place where the custom is to read the Aseres Hadibros daily in public, this custom should be sustained. There is no reason to abolish it, he writes, because there is almost no possibility that some heretic will come and convince some illiterate or unknowledgeable person that no other part of the Torah is valid. Even an עם הארץ knows that the Aseres Hadibros contain the essential and basic tenets of our faith. Accordingly, in a place where this is the custom, the fact they are singled out to be read daily would not lead to any further misunderstanding. ■

Gemara GEM

Shame Leads to Teshuva

כל העושה דבר ומתבייש בו—מוחלין לו על כל עוונותיו

The Gemara says that after having sinned, if a person is embarrassed and humiliated about what he did, this is a form of teshuva, and he is forgiven for his sins. Although literally, the Gemara implies that a person is forgiven for כל עוונותיו - all his sins - nevertheless, Ritva explains that it means that he is forgiven for the sin for which he has experienced regret.

The nature of this embarrassment is not simply an external form of shame, as one might feel if his friend knew about his failing. Rather, it refers to a realization of how one has failed in his relationship to Hashem. The proof to this is evident in the Gemara itself. After having made the statement that embarrassment can lead to atonement, the Gemara attempts to prove it from a verse in Yechezkel, yet, the Gemara is not immediately convinced. Perhaps, says the Gemara, the situation there by Yechezkel was where many people together came to repent, where, of course their efforts would be accepted. Now, generally embarrassment is mitigated and diminished when many people together feel ashamed, for any individual can minimize or deny his own failing. Nevertheless, when the embarrassment is in front of Hashem, the fact that many people experience it together does not relieve anyone of the full brunt of the shame. In fact, such an emotion is amplified when experienced in a group, for everyone sees the effect of sin, and each person can then arrive at conclusions to change his ways. ■

HALACHAH Highlight

Standing when the עשרת הדברות Are Read

”אמר רב יהודה אמר שמואל: אף בגבולין בקשו לקרות כן, אלא שכבר בטלום מפני תרעומת המינין. תניא נמי הכי, רבי נתן אומר: בגבולין בקשו לקרות כן אלא שכבר בטלום מפני תרעומת המינין.”

"Rav Yehuda said in the name of Shmuel: Even in the provinces, the Rabbis desired to establish the recitation of the Ten Commandments. However, they had to abrogate this idea because of the arguments of the heretics."

Our Gemara says that the Rabbis didn't establish that one should read the Aseres Hadibros in public because of the heretics. Rashi¹ explains our Gemara that the concern was that the heretics not try to poison our uninstructed brethren by telling them that the rest of the Torah is ח"ו false, since only the Ten Commandments which we were told by Hashem is read.

The Rambam² was asked about the custom of standing when the Ten Commandments are being read in the synagogue. He responded that this practice is prohibited since it appears to distinguish between different passages of the Torah. People could be misled to believe that Ten Commandments are more important than the rest of the Torah.

However, Rav Shmuel Abuhav³ draws a distinction between our Gemara and the custom of standing while hearing the Ten Commandments. He explains that there is no concern of the negative influence of the heretics as regards this custom, since everyone knows that the reason for this custom is to reenact the Jews standing as they heard the Aseres Hadibros. He adds that the Rabbinic prohibition was for a public reading of the Aseres Hadibros in the middle of the blessings

- One who can request mercy for a friend and does not is called a sinner.
- If someone commits an aveira and they are embarrassed because of it, their sins are forgiven.

5) Parshas Balak and Parshas Tzitzis

The suggestion of including parshas balak into krias sh'ma is discussed as well as the reasons for including parshas tzitzis.

6) MISHNAH: There is a disagreement whether there is a mitzvah to mention Yetzias Mitzrayim at night.

7) Mentioning Yetzias Mitzrayim

A baraisa records the discussion between Ben Zoma and the Chachamim about mentioning Yetzias Mitzrayim in the time of Moshiach. ■ of the Shema, not a Torah reading.

Rav David Feinstein⁴ differentiates between this custom and the prohibition of our Gemara by pointing out that there are other Torah sections which have the same custom, such as the Shira. Realizing that there are passages aside from the Ten Commandments for which we stand, people will not be misled by the heretics. ■

STORIES Off the Daf

To Bow Before the King

רב ששת כי כרע כרע כחזרא, כי זקיף זקיף כחויא

R' Zundel from Salant was the Rebbe of R' Yisroel Salanter. One of his students once found him standing and practicing the detailed bows and bends that are done during the Amidah. The student watched in amazement as his rebbe first bent his knees, and then how he bowed his entire body at once. Then he observed how his rebbe stood up straight at once, as the halacha specifies. When R' Zundel had finished his "practice session", the student inquired in order to understand what his rebbe was doing.

R' Zundel explained, "There is no question that this is the common practice throughout the world! After all, any soldier who knows that he will serve before the king will no doubt prepare themselves before they are about to perform. There are extensive training exercises and practice sessions where the troops go through every step and every move they will make, until they work with precision and as if it is second nature. Once they appear before the King, it is too late to try out new moves, for every aspect of their routine must already be perfected.

"Therefore," concluded R' Zundel, "in preparation for the Amidah, I am trying to perfect my bows and bends which I know I will have to make when I stand before the King. I cannot wait until the Amidah itself before I think about how to make each move, for at that time, as I stand in the throne room of the King, I will be too overwhelmed with the prayers and other important things on my mind which I will have to present at that special moment." ■
